The Dynamic Duo for Fighting Heart Disease

Years ago sailors on long voyages died of scurvy, a severe form of vitamin C deficiency. But the ship's cats never died. They make their own vitamin C. Interviews with Dr. Linus Pauling convinced Gifford-Jones that today we are all suffering from sub-clinical scurvy. Coronary arteries, closest to the heart, receive the greatest pressure and without enough Vitamin C collagen weakens resulting in heart attack. Now, the work of Dr. Sydney Bush shows that Vitamin C plus Lysine can reverse this process.
